Dear PUC,

I am a resident of Vermont and I believe that heating oil and propane should qualify for clean heat credits. I know that the company that supplies my propane is working to reduce emissions and making sure that the products they deliver are clean and burn efficiently.

Vermont has become a very expensive state to live in and the fuel dealers and residents should not be punished for doing their best to heat their homes efficiently and responsibly. We should not be relying solely on electricity for heating our homes and lighting as we experience power outages and brownouts due to over usage on the grid.

The mini split units that the state is pushing for residents to use for heating their homes, are not efficient once the temperature outside drops below 30 degrees and most residents can not afford the extra electricity costs to run them.

We need to know the plan for the taxes and fees that are being discussed so we can budget for the increases.

Thank you.
